

Growing Greener

Conservation By Design

What is a Community Assessment ?

The first step that a community can take to see how well its local ordinances conserve land as development occurs, is to complete an assessment of its land use regulations. An assessment entails a thorough review of the local Comprehensive Plan, Open Space Plan, subdivision and zoning codes by Natural Lands Trust staff. The community receives a written report, outlining specific changes to the various sections of the code that would be necessary to incorporate Growing Greener development standards. The assessment also includes a public presentation of the report, usually at an informal work session with Supervisors and Planning Commission members.

Pennsylvania communities are finding that the assessments are a convenient, low cost means of reaching consensus and charting the course, or “next steps,” before starting the more time-consuming and detail-oriented process of ordinance revisions.

Assessments generally cost $1,500, and with a maximum Growing Greener subsidy of $1,000, the community’s share is only $500, plus travel expenses.

Now in its sixth year, Growing Greener: Conservation By Design is a statewide community planning initiative, a collaborative effort of the Pennsylvania Department of Conservation and Natural Resources (DCNR), Natural Lands Trust and the Governor’s Center for Local Government Services. Growing Greener is designed to help communities use the development regulation process to their advantage to protect interconnected networks of permanent open space. The program offers multi-media educational material and technical assistance to communities so that conservation and development objectives may be achieved simultaneously, in a manner that is fair to all parties concerned.

Funding provided by:
Pennsylvania Department of Conservation and Natural Resources,
Pennsylvania Department of Community and Economic Development,
The William Penn Foundation, and the Heinz Endowments

How Do I Learn More?

If you are interested in having a community assessment completed for your municipality, call Monica Drowniany or Ann Hutchinson at Natural Lands Trust: 610-353-5587.